Nursing Leadership: Making a Difference in Mental Health and Addictions

The Canadian Journal of Nursing Leadership is planning a future issue focused on nursing leadership in the area of mental health and addictions, and is seeking submission of abstracts proposing manuscripts related to this topic. Mental health and addictions have emerged as critically important in the Canadian healthcare system. Nurses are ideally positioned to lead efforts to improve care and outcomes for patients and their families.

We are particularly interested in manuscripts that explore the topics listed below. We will review a range of formats – research papers, case studies, and practice and evidence-informed perspectives, highlighting:

- Innovative approaches and advances in mental health nursing practice
- Approaches to challenging stigma
- Partnering with patients and families
- Peer Support
- Technology use
- Federal and provincial policies to support care transitions

We are initially looking for a 150-word abstract that provides detail on your proposed paper including key messages and potential value to readers. Abstracts are due May 26, 2017. Invitations to submit full papers will be issued by June 16st. First drafts must be submitted to the journal by August 11st. Papers will be subjected to internal and external review.

Please feel free to contact us if you have comments, questions or suggestions. We look forward to receiving many interesting and important submissions.
